Available Services

Information and Referral

This information can be provided to people with a disability, their families, friends, and the community.

Peer Counseling

Peers act as role models, share personal experiences, share information and support to people with disabilities as they develop and implement their own independence. Some examples are understanding their disability, the impact it has on their lives, and how to adjust to it.

Individual and Systems Advocacy

Individuals with disabilities learn to advocate for themselves in order to gain services and accommodations. Advocacy with businesses and agencies is provided to remove physical and attitudinal barriers.

Independent Living Skills

Individuals with disabilities learn skills needed to become or sustain independence. Some examples are budgeting, time management, money management, communications, riding the bus, daily living skills such as cooking, smart shopping, cleaning, laundry, and using assistive technology. These are just a few examples; independence is different for each individual.

Technical Assistance

Assistance is provided to help businesses, agencies, schools, and government entities to identify and remove architectural, communication, and attitudinal barriers.

Technical assistance is provided in the selection and use of equipment and aids to daily living, including but not limited to magnifiers, cooking aids, and exercise equipment.
